Is your domestic arbitration law based on the UNCITRAL Model Law? What are the major differences between your domestic arbitration law and the UNCITRAL Model Law?

The domestic arbitration law is unique to each province and territory. While there may be similarities in provisions as between different provincial statutes relating to domestic arbitration, the specific statute should be consulted. None of the domestic arbitration acts of Canada are based upon the UNCITRAL Model Law, although they typically reflect similar principles to those enshrined in the Model Law. By contrast, the international commercial arbitration acts of the provinces are more typically based upon the UNCITRAL Model Law.

Question 5 Mandatory provisions

What are the mandatory domestic arbitration law provisions on procedure from which parties may not deviate?

The statutes in which the Model Law has been adopted in Canada generally allow the parties to agree their own procedural rules for conducting the arbitration, including rules departing from the default positions in the statute. The major mandatory rule is the requirement that the parties be 'treated with equality' and 'be given a full opportunity to present their cases'. In Quebec, that mandatory rule of equality expressly extends to the parties' right to participate in the selection of the arbitrators (article 2641 of the Civil Code). Other rights conferred on parties by legislation may also be considered mandatory and parties should be alive to the risk that a court may not uphold its bargain to exclude such rights.

Question 6 Substantive law

Is there any rule in your domestic arbitration law that provides the arbitral tribunal with guidance as to which substantive law to apply to the merits of the dispute?

Arbitral tribunals apply the law chosen by the parties. If the parties have not expressly selected an applicable law, then the proper law of the contract must be determined in light of their agreement, considered as a whole, and any surrounding circumstances. The decision on the applicable law is typically vested with the arbitral tribunal. As set out in the Model Law (article 28), '[f]ailing any designation by the parties, the arbitral tribunal shall apply the law determined by the conflict of laws rules which it considers applicable'. In general, the law with which the agreement appears to have the closest and most substantial connection ought to prevail.
